Fool Moon Releases Sophomore Endeavor, 'Little Do We Know'

Netherlands - Eight years since their birth in 2007, the rock group Fool Moon has released their second studio record. Released in June, 'Little Do We Know' is the long-awaited follow-up to the outfit's 2012 debut. The hard-rocking new album is an eclectic, ambitious effort, clocking in at a hefty sixteen tracks.

Though the new record is sixteen tracks, fans will discover twelve new original tunes, a cover, and three bonus tracks, which are remasterings of Fool Moon's first EP. The album boasts a driving rendition of J.J. Cale's famous 'Cocaine,' a song later popularized by Eric Clapton on the classic record, 'Slowhand.' The main single for 'Little Do We Know' is 'Honey I Know.'

Since its inception in 2007, Fool Moon has become one of the more prominent independent acts in the Netherlands. After the release of their first EP in 2010, the band received significant acclaim for their work, both from fans and radio stations such as Kink FM, which placed the band seventh in a contest of five hundred groups. This won Fool Moon the honor of performing at the Paradiso festival in 2011.

Their extensive touring in 2011 expanded the outfit's fan-base, which lead Fool Moon to the studio the following year to record their debut. In recent years, the band has been hailed for their unique guitar riffs, intelligent compositions, and sharp lead vocals. Critics have noted the band's ability to harness their instruments in remarkable ways, adding incredible layers of depth and insight into each song.

"The solos rip into you and leave you wanting a bit more." - Super Sidekick Records
"Catchy guitar riffs worm their way into your subconscious and stay there..." - 66 Records
